Creating a Culturally Sensitive Holiday Season

In Minnesota, the final months of the year are filled with many cultural events and celebrations. While many of us look forward to our own traditions and festivities, it is important to recognize and respect the cultural traditions of both patients and staff during the holiday season.

The workforce of many healthcare organizations is made up of a broad spectrum of cultural, national, ethnic, and religious traditions, and the task of fostering an atmosphere of acceptance and inclusion can be challenging.

The holiday season often poses a particular challenge for managers in healthcare settings. Over the span of just a few short weeks, many of the world’s religious and ethnic groups traditionally celebrate one or more days of spiritual or cultural significance.

The subtle task of acknowledging all of these holidays with equity, fairness, and respect – and ensuring that no one feels left out or slighted in the process – can be a bit overwhelming. Here are some guidelines to help you steer your organization through the holiday season with sensitivity, cultural awareness – and a sense of festive fun.

- Assemble a diverse holiday planning committee.
  One way to make sure that your organization’s holiday plans meet the needs of your multicultural staff is to recruit a team of employee representatives to help lead the planning process. By bringing together team members who represent an array of faiths, ethnicities, and cultural traditions, you’ll stand a much better chance of forging a holiday observance plan that’s truly inclusive.

- Be flexible, fair, and consistent in planning a holiday work schedule.
  Well before the holiday season kicks off, solicit input from your team about their scheduling needs. Establish a set of guidelines that all employees must follow when requesting alternative hours or absences. This will help you be as equitable as possible in allotting holiday time off.

- When appropriate, acknowledge multiple traditions.
  Your first concern during the holiday season is making sure that no one feels left out or slighted. However, the truly diverse workplace goes beyond that, making sure that everyone feels respected and celebrated. You can help embrace diversity by asking staff to share their traditions with the group. For example, you can host a multicultural potluck or ask employees from different backgrounds to decorate holiday bulletin boards in the staff lounge.

on a rotating basis during each week of a holiday month.

- Non-specific themes work best. Holiday season sensitivity means that your organization does not impose or endorse a certain way of celebrating the holidays. At the same time that you take every opportunity to honor or acknowledge multiple traditions, it’s probably safest to stick with more generic choices when it comes to workplace decorations, music, activities, and so on. For example, winter-themed décor and festivities are usually a safe bet.

- Don’t forget to have fun. It’s easy to get so caught up in the process of treading cautiously through the holidays that you forget to appreciate the shared joy of the season. Talk openly to your staff about your organization’s commitment to diversity. Create policies that clearly demonstrate respect for all traditions. As long as you approach the challenges of the season with a mindset of sensitivity and awareness, your team won’t have to forego any of their hard-earned holiday fun.

U.S. Life Expectancy Keeps Rising, Racial Gap at Record Low
A recent Medscape article highlights the findings of a National Vital Statistics Report that life expectancy at birth has increased for most Americans, regardless of gender, race, or ethnicity. The increase in life expectancy in 2009 over 2008 stems from decreases in death from heart disease, cancer, unintentional injuries, stroke, and chronic lower respiratory diseases, the report notes.

By race, between 2008 and 2009, life expectancy increased 0.5 years to 74.5 years for the black population, and 0.3 years to 78.8 years for the white population. “The difference in life expectancy between the white and black populations was 4.3 years in 2009, a historically record-low level,” the report notes. Spoken Language Health Care Interpreter Project Update
The Minnesota Department of Health’s Spoken Language Health Care Interpreter Project recently conducted a survey to gather information from members of the medical interpreter community and those who work with medical interpreters. The survey, which ended December 5, 2014, was created so that MDH can consider stakeholder perspectives as they create the report and draft bill that will be submitted to the Minnesota legislature in early 2015. Somali, Hmong Language Online Civil Legal Help Now Available
Legal Services State Support, a project of the Minnesota Legal Services Coalition, recently announced that their client website, LawHelpMN.org, now has a Somali mirror site, and a Hmong mirror site.

LawHelpMN.org is designed to provide information and resources to Minnesotans who have civil legal issues. The focus of the website is on low-income Minnesotans, but there are resources that are relevant for many people who have legal questions. The new sites mean that Somali and Hmong speakers are now able to navigate in their own language.
